

Nina King is a seasoned leader adept at assembling teams to achieve objectives. She has successfully managed high-performance program management teams with a strong focus on executing with attention to details. By fostering an environment where team members can teach and learn from one another, she cultivates a robust team capable of delivering exceptional results.

Nina's leadership approach is characterized by leading through example, actively engaging with her team, and embracing both coaching and being coached. She emphasizes that learning extends beyond theoretical knowledge to encompass understanding the individuals with whom one interacts.

In her commitment to creating a diverse and inclusive team, Nina has also expanded her network by volunteering with The WICT Network since 2020, and she currently serves as the Director of General Programming for the Rocky Mountain Chapter Board of Directors of The WICT Network.

Her professional journey began in 1988 when she joined USWEST shortly after earning her Bachelor's degree in Electrical Engineering from CU Denver. Her passion for telecommunications motivated her to pursue a Master's degree in Telecommunications from CU Boulder. This educational foundation paved the way for her career in telecommunications, leading her to positions at Lucent Technologies, Level 3, Qwest/CenturyLink, and most recently, Spectrum. Over the past two decades, she has gained extensive experience in switch planning, network planning, software development, and program management, focusing on product development for both consumer and enterprise markets. Currently, she holds the position of Senior Director of Program Management within the Product Development organization at Spectrum Business.
